HEART AND HOME TALKS.

Using Brains.

It isn't that people haven't brains that some seem so stupid and others clever. Probably if their brains were weighed and analyzed, a bit of work quite familiar to scientists nowadays, the brains of both the stupid and the clever would be found to be nearly equal. The trouble is some people never use their brains.

The errand boy of a butcher shop regularly took the meat to a house after the family had moved away and hung it on the door knob. He had not only been told that the family had moved and been given their new address, but he could see by the appearance of the house that nobody lived there.

A baggage man pasted hotel labels on a trunk right after the name and address of the owner, painted on the trunk.

A man sent to put awnings screened the hook to which the ropes are fastened on the window sill inside the window. How he expected the window to be closed deponent sayeth not.

A dressmaker's assistant finished one sleeve of a waist with a point over the hand, the other in a straight line at the wrist.

A group of five women stood talking for twenty minutes in a crowded restaurant right in the main aisle, where the waitresses had to pass with their loaded waiters. The waitresses were passing constantly and every time they were compelled to crowd by these women, to the imminent peril of upsetting their trays. But the women never budged, though there was a waiting-room a few feet away.

These instances could be multiplied a hundred fold. They are in every one's experience. They are the sort of things that make one meditate upon justifiable homicide.

Yet these people all have brains. Their actions seem to prove the contrary, but they are not idiots. Talk to the butcher shop boy about baseball and he is alive and interesting. He hangs the meat up at the empty house simply because he does not use his brains.

Call the awning man's attention to the misplaced hook and ask him how he expects you to lower or raise the awning or close the window and he immediately sees his mistake. He "didn't think" when he put it there. He is simply letting his brains sleep.

Talk to the dressmaker's assistant about a dance and she is as bright a girl as you would meet anywhere. Her brains, too, are not being used. They are not stupid in the sense that they lack ability. They simply do not use what they have.

What, then, shall be the remedy? Not to scold them and tell them they are stupid, but to wake them up. Get them interested in using their brains. Let them see the reason behind the error.

Particularly with children inclined to this fault is this a good course. A scolding is apt to be forgotten or resented. An appeal to reason and judgment interests and gives something to fix the attention on. And with the attention caught and memory enlisted the fault is not so apt to be repeated.

BARBARA BOYD.

FROM WOMAN'S POINT OF VIEW

The average woman is smart enough in many directions. She is able to do some one thing well or can do several things fairly well. Often she amazes mere men with the variety of her accomplishments, but in one particular direction she is taken advantage of at every turn when those with whom she deals are unscrupulous; at best she is the object of mirth by her mistakes in simple business matters.

You may visit any bank you may select and get all the information on that point you desire without asking a solitary question. Every step in the process of depositing and withdrawing money is patiently explained to women who do not remember one detail till the next week. I have seen the same mistake made by a woman week after week, showing that there is no desire to master details which are of real value. Women as a whole do not care to lose their ignorance of business matters.

Contracts are even now being enforced when there is no legal reason for it. Women have been allowed to sign the name they received in marriage—the courtesy title, so to speak—because it is well known that few of them know that the law requires at least a part of the baptismal name. Hosts of women have been compelled to pay debts twice over, through negligence in procuring release in the form of a receipt, and many more know nothing of the advantage of cash discount, which is the very foundation of trade.

A few women have bank accounts on which they can draw by check. The slips of paper have little meaning till the day of balance arrives and they are confronted by the cold facts of bank figures and the canceled checks. They learn rapidly under such tuition. Wage-earners would be supposed to know how to care for their hard-earned money, but witness the sharp gains which are exposed from time to time, always after the public has been lied to the protesting point.

Woman's incompetence is responsible for a lot of poverty. Comfortable fortunes have been left to thousands of families and absorbed by rascals to whose care the property was confided. The widows and daughters, knowing nothing of business, did not ask for an accounting, and to this day are ignorant where the wings by which the money flew away were secured. There are ways to compel restitution or force punishment, but they are not known to women. I have heard of games and small inventions actually stolen from women and turned into fortunes. One woman was stubborn enough to make trouble, but did not know how far she could go, therefore was put off with a small sum of money.

Recipes.
Scalloped Clams—The clams are steamed and cut in small pieces. Melt in a saucepan, but not brown, two tablespoonsful of butter. Stir in two tablespoonsful of flour, and when it boils add gradually one pint of cream, stirring constantly until it boils and thickens. Take from the fire, add a shake of black pepper and a grating of two of nutmeg. Put a layer of clams in a scalloped dish, then a layer of sauce, alternating them until the dish is full. Sprinkle dried bread crumbs over the top and bake until brown.

Baked Blue Fish—Slit the fish's head at the gills and draw out the intestines, but do not cut off the head. Rinse thoroughly. Mix half a pint of dry bread crumbs with two tablespoonsful of melted butter, a teaspoonful of lemon juice, and a seasoning of salt and pepper. Pack this into the fish and sew the head down. Scatter bread crumbs thickly over the fish, baste with melted butter, and pour around it in the pan half a cupful of boiling water in which a teaspoonful of butter has been melted. Bake about an hour, basting every ten minutes.

LATEST FASHIONS.

LADIES' NINE-GORED SKIRT.

Paris Pattern No. 2788

All Seams Allowed.

This simple and practical model of the walking skirt of serge, tweed, cheviot, mohair, linen, khaki or Venetian cloth is cut in narrow rows, shaped into the waist line at the upper edge, giving the fashionable slim appearance to the figure. A unique feature is the added fullness at the lower edge of the front, which is supplied by the inverted box-pleat at either side of the side-front seams, a similar inverted pleat at the center-back supplying the fullness at this point also. If desired, this skirt may be trimmed with narrow braid along the edges of each seam, finishing in a fancy design just below the knees. In fact, it will be noticed that most of the trimming this season runs lengthwise, which adds height to the figure, and which is always graceful if properly applied. For the coming summer skirts of Victoria lawn are to be much worn with the separate waist of batiste or nainsook, and this model is an excellent one for skirts of this material. The pattern is in eight sizes—22 to 36 inches waist measure. For 22 waist the skirt, made of material with nap, requires 9 yards 20 inches wide, 4 1/2 yards 36 inches wide, 4 1/2 yards 42 inches wide or 3 1/2 yards 54 inches wide; without nap it needs 8 1/2 yards 20 inches wide, 4 1/2 yards 36 inches wide, 3 1/2 yards 42 inches wide or 2 1/2 yards 54 inches wide; width of lower edge, about 4 yards.

New Spring Hats.

From Harper's Bazar.

Some pretty lace hats and bonnets are appearing. Some are shaped like the Corday, and others are frankly bell or turban shaped. They are stretched first with fine, very sheer bastille, which is afterward covered with circular tiers of inch-wide pleated valenciennes. At most these lace hats are trimmed with a single big rose or carnation. The thought of such hats naturally suggests garden parties and pretty parsons. Some of the most novel of the latter have from twelve to twenty ribs, each pointed with an ornamental nib. The handles are all extremely long, the director's length being that most advocated. Those little carriage parasols with jointed handles which elderly ladies always love are prettier than ever this year. Their average diameter is twenty inches and many are tiered with gathered lace ruffles.

The simplest of puddings, such as chocolate, bread, or rice, can be made much more tasty by adding a little coconut, a few chopped nuts, or some chopped figs.

TYPES AT MT. VERNON

Master Printers End Four Days' Convention.

VISIT HOME OF WASHINGTON

Delegates Banish Thoughts of Scientific Papers and Enjoy Outing on Banks of Potomac—Officers Elected Before Adjournment—Former Mayor Makes Address.

Historic Mount Vernon was the playground yesterday afternoon of the delegates to the twenty-fourth annual convention of the United Typothetae of America, which concluded a successful session of four days and took adjournment at 2 o'clock.

Adhering to the old adage, "All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy," the delegates banished thoughts of public questions and scientific papers to abandon themselves to the pleasures of an outing on the green banks of the Potomac. They invaded every nook and cranny and roamed about the woods contiguous to the old mansion.

Leave for Their Homes.

The excursion consumed several hours, and night was approaching when the delegates turned their way toward Washington. The majority left Washington for their homes last night.

The final business transacted before adjournment was the election of officers, which resulted as follows:

William H. Lee, New Haven, president; J. Stearns, Cushing, Mass., first vice president; George M. Curtis, Texas, second vice president; J. A. Morgan, Chicago, third vice president; A. M. Glosheimer, treasurer.

The members of the executive committee are Harry K. Dean, Grand Rapids; E. Lawrence Fell, Philadelphia; Benjamin P. Moulton, Rhode Island; E. A. Kendrick, Buffalo; A. E. Southworth, Chicago; L. F. Davidson, Louisville; George H. Ellis, Boston; Alexander Fitzhugh, Des Moines; W. T. Fletcher, Kansas City; William Green, New York; H. W. J. Meyer, Milwaukee; W. E. Mulligan, San Antonio, Tex.; William Pratt, New Orleans; Robert Schatzknecht, New York; Fred L. Smith, Minneapolis; Edward Stern, Philadelphia; John Swell, Winnipeg, Canada; Rufus C. Williams, Richmond, president, vice president and treasurer, ex officio; Franklin W. Heath, secretary, the Boston, Philadelphia.

Former Mayor Talks.

The feature of the morning session was an address by former Mayor Charles Bookwalter, of Indianapolis, who spoke on the subject, "The future of Winona Technical Institute."

He declared the American boy of today considers it dishonorable and a disgrace to work with his sleeves rolled up because of false pride, and that their heads are being developed to the detriment of their hands.

The convention voted to appropriate $2,000 toward the support of Winona Technical Institute, where boys are taught to become printers, lithographers, mechanics, molders, and carpenters.

PASTOR IS CHOSEN FOR MT. PLEASANT

Rev. F. J. Goodwin to Fill Vacancy of a Year.

Dr. F. M. Neuman, president of Keammar College, of Hagerstown, has been acting pastor and probably will continue the discharge of the duties until the new pastor is installed. Rev. Mr. Goodwin was unanimously accepted by the congregation when his name was presented by the committee.

The committee is composed of E. S. Peck, M. P. Mooney, W. Ellis Spear, E. C. Davis, Mrs. N. E. Young, Mrs. L. M. Cleveland, A. L. Sturtevant, P. C. Dulin, and David F. Carll.

FATHER OF THE RATE BILL.

James B. Morrow reveals the secrets of rate legislation, as related by Charles E. Townsend, the man who started the agitation in Congress, and who will try this summer to beat Julius Caesar Burrows for the United States Senate. He tells of his hard battle to get the railroad question before the House of Representatives, and how he was snubbed and laughed at, and eventually deprived of having his name attached to the law he originated. He shows just how overcapitalization of railways injures the public, and says that rebates are now being given to favored shippers in the form of alleged damages sustained by freight in shipment.

MORNING CHIT-CHAT.

"I DO have the very worst luck," pouted the youngest and prettiest member of our stenographers' department, as she fished for the five hatpins in the vast reaches of her black hat, coaxed her hair back into puffiness, and began to pin on a fresh pair of white cuffs in preparation for the afternoon's work.

"What is it now?" we asked. "Did he take you in earnest this time when you said 'Good-by forever,' or did some one say something rude about those six inches of superfluous hatpin in the back of your hat?"

The youngest and prettiest stenographer pouted still more. Being so very pretty this was permissible. Otherwise it would not have been. None but a very pretty girl can afford to pout.

"I never saw anything like it," she asserted, loftily ignoring our impertinent questions. "I can't imagine how he happened to be there at just that moment. It's such an out of the way street."

We suggested that we might enlighten her as to how he happened to be there if she told us who "he" was and where "there" was.

"The boss, of course. It was such a dandy day that my chum and I thought we'd take a walk after we had our luncheon. We went down by the markets and we went past a big fruit stand with a whole lot of those big grapefruit on it, and Stella stumped me to pinch one of them."

"I did, of course, and of course that horrid old Italian came out and caught me and called me awful names and half a dozen people stopped to listen, and just then, who on earth should come along but the boss."

"He took off his hat, but he gave me such a look. Ain't it just my luck? He probably thinks I'm a perfect rowdy. What would you do with luck like that?"

Isn't luck a strange word, or rather a strangely abused one? When the law of cause and effect acts to their distaste, some people have a way of referring to it as their particular brand of bad luck.

I suppose the burglar who gets caught considers his prison term as just his entirely undeserved bad luck.

It is, I'm sure you'll agree, as almost inevitable law of circumstances that when you do anything undignified or foolish the boss or the school committee, or whatever particular Mr. or Mrs. Grundy is the persons most non grata to you, will undoubtedly turn out to have been present somewhere among the scenery.

You might as well call that unlucky as that you get wet when you go out in the rain.

There is just one way of being sure of being dry when it rains, and that is not to go out in the rain.

And there is just one way of being sure the boss won't see you do some foolish or undignified thing, and that is not to do foolish and undignified things.

RUTH CAMERON.
